C. Lewis Hind is a well-known English critic of art and literature, a former correspondent of the "International Interpreter," and the author of a number of books such as "Adventures Among Books," "The Diary of a Looker-On," and "Things Seen in America."

Charles Fitzhugh Talman contributes another article in his series on the labor-saving devices of modern industry. He is a frequent contributor to current periodicals on scientific and industrial subjects.

P. W. Wilson, author, editor, and newspaper correspondent, now resident in the United States, was for several years a Liberal member of the British Parliament. He has been a frequent and welcome contributor to The Outlook.

The Education Movement in China

Every article in The Outlook by Professor and United States Representative Davenport thus far has been illuminating. But his recent statement, in the Honolulu article, August 9, 1925, "I had never heard of it [the national mass education movement of China] until I got two thousand miles out into the Pacific, and I have not been able to find anybody since I reached home who ever heard of it either," is astonishing. Can a good optician furnish the gifted college man a pair of well-focussed eye-glasses?

The whole work of missionary education in China is based at present on the new Chinese vernacular, and hosts of publications in America have testified to its great value and increasing popularity in China. The remark is only a commentary on what some men will read. Aside from this lapse, F. M. Davenport's article is a fine contribution.

How Does a Fire Start?

Not with a big flame, but with a tiny spark which, unnoticed, spreads and grows until it becomes a big flame—a devastating force that burns up a home, a factory, even a big city.

When it has grown big, it is hard to check. When it was a little spark, it could have been put out in an instant.

Disease grows in your system in the same way. It begins with a tiny spark, a little irregularity which, unnoticed and neglected, can grow into a devastating illness.

You should know when the first little spark of disease starts to burn in your system. You can know, if you have our Health Protective Service.

In our laboratories we watch the state of your health as revealed by urinalysis. Our scientific precision in this enables us to notify you when the first spark of disease starts, and this enables you to check it and prevent it from developing into something more serious.

It takes little of your time.

It costs only $15 a year—a negligible amount when you consider the protection it affords.

The new edition of our brochure, "The Span of Life," is now off the press. We shall be glad to send you a copy free of charge.

The winsome guardian of your hair cries:

"Simple care is safest!"

MAYBE you don't believe in elves any more, but a lovely real one watches over your hair and she trembles with fear every time you say, "Well, what should I try next?"

"Don't experiment," she pleads. "Just get your hair clean and soft and beautiful, and that is so easy."

Elves don't ordinarily bother much with scientific matters, but they have been investigating the writings of scientific gentlemen who really know.

This is what they found:

"You can keep your hair beautiful and fluffy and glossy by cheerfully shampooing it two or three times a month with pure soap and soft water, and by gaily brushing it thoroughly every day with a clean brush to give it the glorious sheen that every woman wants."

When it comes to soap, the elves just naturally assume that you will use Ivory. They know it is pure and mild and safe. When you massage your shapely head with that lovely rich Ivory lather and feel the tiny cleansing bubbles getting right down to the depths of your hair, you, too, will know how pure and mild and safe it is. And, oh, how fine your head will feel and how beautiful your hair will look—soft and fluffy and deliciously clean smelling.

You will use Ivory for your face and hands and bath too, of course, just as millions of other careful women do.
